

Please do not approve the use of cell phones on airplane flights. The ability to turn them on during taxiing is more than sufficient. The Brits (and other European nations) now allow travelers on their trains to use cell phones and the noise environment has been increased to the point of complete annoyance. An airplane cabin is even smaller than these train compartments - so the noise levels would make airline travel extremely noisy and exhausting. Thanks for listening. - Randy